

But after 1968, the Democratic party got together and said, listen, we really want a different nominating process, we want a nominating process where voters pick our candidate for President, not insiders, not people who control delegations from respective states like Governors or other people, important people in the party as they may be, nevertheless they didn't reflect the expressed sentiments of voters.