

It was a very lively and competitive contest, and it was not entirely clear that Jack Kennedy was going to win. It wasn't until Wyoming that he finally got his majority. But it was very exciting; I was in the convention hall when he came over to thank the delegates, even before his acceptance speech the following day. And it was an extraordinary experience, just to be there. And after all, he was a son of Massachusetts, he was our guy, and surrounded by some very able people.